Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs

LIBE Committee Inquiry on Electronic Mass Surveillance of EU Citizens

Draft programme

Monday 7 October 2013, 19.00 – 21.30

Strasbourg

Room WIC200

Background

1. EU data protection law¹ has been established with the objective of protecting the fundamental rights and freedoms of natural persons in particular their right to the protection of personal data. Moreover the compliance with these rules is subject to the control of public independent authorities.
2. EU data protection law contains specific provisions relating international transfers of personal data processed in the EU to third countries; their objective is to ensure the continuity of the protection afforded by EU law where personal data are transferred. In substance, transfers may take place where the third country offers an adequate level of protection or when, in the absence of adequate level of protection, the controller adduces appropriate safeguards with respect to the protection of personal data (e.g.: contractual clauses, binding corporate rules). Derogations to this rule may occur in specific cases laid down in EU data protection law.
3. The Commission has declared in 2000 that the Safe Harbour Principles issued by the US Department of Commerce provide an adequate level of protection². Transfers to organisations not having self-certified adherence to Safe Harbour principles will take place under other mechanisms such as contractual clauses of binding corporate rules.
4. This hearing focuses on the impact of electronic mass surveillance of EU citizens on their fundamental right to the protection of personal data.
5. Session I focuses on the impact of mass surveillance programmes on the rights of EU citizens to data protection, either these programmes are implemented by third countries or by EU Member States. The Commission will also inform on the progress of its evaluation of the Safe Harbour.
6. Sessions II and III are devoted to the assessment of the impact of US surveillance programmes on existing tools for transfers of personal data to the US. While Session II focuses on the US Safe Harbour, Session III focuses on the impact on other instruments used by companies for their data flows. Statements of the EU data protection authorities, the European Data Protection Supervisor and a management services consultant entity in privacy and new technologies which has issued reports on the implementation of the US Safe Harbour.
