In developing its policy on immigration and asylum, the EU has expressed a commitment to respect for fundamental rights, access to justice and the rule of law. Is it living up to that commitment? This important 2-day conference will:

- examine the latest developments in European immigration and asylum law and policy
- critically assess the progress that has been made in implementing the agenda agreed by the European Council at Tampere
- look forward to the next stage of the development of EU asylum and immigration law and policy under the Hague Programme
- bring together expert speakers to offer a detailed evaluation of the legal instruments developed so far
- assess the impact of EU enlargement and the Constitutional Treaty

From Amsterdam ... via Tampere ... to the Hague and beyond

The establishment of an area of freedom, security and justice has been among the most ambitious and controversial of the new policy areas of the EU. The Amsterdam Treaty, which came into force on 1 May 1999, ensured that the right to move freely throughout the Union could be enjoyed in conditions of security and justice accessible to all – including those whose circumstances justifiably lead them to seek access to the territory of the EU.

Building on the legal framework created at Amsterdam, the Tampere European Council agreed a five year work programme (1999-2004) designed to bring the project to fruition. The Hague Programme, agreed in November 2004, advances the Tampere agenda and sets out the EU’s legislative and operational ambitions in the area for the next five years.

Two important factors – the accession of ten new states to the EU in 2004 and the proposed Constitutional Treaty – are already having an impact on a project conceived under radically different circumstances. These factors present an additional challenge to the EU as it seeks to model a single coherent system firmly anchored in the rule of law.
